Attention High School Artists!

"An Artistic Discovery" provides Members of Congress and the public the opportunity to recognize and encourage the rich artistic talents of young Americans at a time when local cultural organizations and arts-in-education programs are being curtailed.

Each year, Members of Congress conduct local art competitions in their districts. The winning piece of art from the Second Congressional District Competition and those from other congressional districts across the nation will become part of an impressive national display exhibited in the United States Capitol.

The competition is open to high school students only. All art must be ready to be picked up on Thursday, April 14, 2011. Art Teachers or students should contact either of the District Offices listed on the other side of this postcard to arrange for a pickup.

The 2010 winning entry, pictured here, and currently on display in the U.S. Capitol is Down By The Bay, a Watercolor created by Emily Prast of Longmeadow High.

Visit my website www.house.gov/neal for further information and to download guidelines and entry forms.
